Common Pronunciation Mistakes

Because lachesism is not a everyday word, it’s easy to stumble over it. Here are the most frequent errors and how to correct them.

- Misplacing the Stress – Some speakers place the stress on the second or third syllable, resulting in “la-CHES-ism” or “la-ches-ISM.” Remember, the stress is on the first syllable: LAH ches ism.
- Pronouncing “ch” as a Hard “k” – Saying “la-ches ism” with a hard “k” sound (“la-ches ism”) is incorrect. The “ch” should be soft, like in “church.”
- Adding an Extra “e” Sound – Some people insert an extra vowel sound between “ch” and “i,” making it sound like “la-ches e ism.” Keep the syllable short.
- Overpronouncing the “m” – The final “m” is almost silent. Saying “la-ches ism um” can make the word sound clunky.
- Using a Long “i” Sound – Replacing the short “i” with a long “ee” sound (“la-ches ism”) makes the word feel off.

Keep it short, as in “sit.”
