Overview of Confucianism

Historical Background

Confucianism emerged during the late Spring and Autumn Period (approximately 770–476 BCE) and the Warring States Period (475–221 BCE) in China. Confucius (551–479 BCE), a teacher, politician, and philosopher, sought to revive the moral values and social harmony of the Zhou dynasty. After his death, his disciples compiled his sayings and ideas, forming the foundation of Confucian thought.

Core Principles

The philosophy emphasizes ren (humaneness), li (ritual propriety), yi(righteousness), and the importance of education and self-cultivation. Confucius believed that a well-ordered society arises from individuals who cultivate moral character and adhere to proper conduct.
